This course is intended to teach you basic research design and show you some of the research methods available to social scientists.

You will need to use those skills to write up your undergraduate dissertation, and several Masters programmes will ask for evidence that you have trained in them by requiring that you submit a written sample with your application. Since research and writing skills are highly transferable, they will also be useful in your professional life to write documents like policy papers and other kinds of reports.

The course is organised in a ‘winter school’ three-day format. Each day will start with a one-hour introduction, followed by three lectures.

Principles

- This course is pluralist: it covers a wide range of methods and analytical strategies, which is reflected in the fact that its sessions are taught by a diverse team of ESPOL researchers who themselves use different methods in their own research work.

  At no point during this course will you be told to adopt such or such theoretical or methodological perspective in your own dissertation: you will have to determine that yourself, possibly after consulting with your research supervisor.

- The course is practical: its sessions answer questions of the form “if you want to write a dissertation on [topic] using [method], then you should do [steps].”

  You will receive detailed readings on various methods and analytical strategies as the course goes. Those readings will likely contribute to the write-up of the methods section of your dissertation.

- The course is bilingual: like the rest of your degree, it will be taught either in English or in French, depending on the session lecturer.

  While the final exam for this course will be in English, the compulsory readings on which it will be based are also in both languages.
